BBC News

We are going to watch a clip from a BBC News programme, where we will learn about the Trial of China's Gang of Four.

Task: As we watch, put a tick (✓) next to the correct statements based on what we learn from the clip.

	The Gang of Four (or the 'Four Great God Protectors') seemed strong as they stood trial.
	Former Air Force Commander, Wu Faxian, and the other three senior generals tried with him, abjectly confessed to everything they were accused of.
	When Chairman Mao's wife was put on trial in 1980, she seemed unrepentant for her crimes – the opposite to what is expected.
	In China at the time, it was widely believed that everyone deserved the right to a lawyer and legal defence.
	In the contemporary Chinese court, the court represents the nation, and therefore should be respected as such. The accused are regarded as guilty on the assumption that otherwise authorities would not have brought them to court. They are expected confess and ask for leniency, but nothing more.
	Madame Mao was removed from court for her unruly behaviour, interrupting those speaking in court, and calling the judges 'fascists'.
	Everyone was in agreement that Madame Mao should be executed for her crimes.
